

Second Opinions

Cats can be mysterious creatures – and so can their diseases. Many cats hide their symptoms until they're seriously ill. And once they're sick, it can be difficult to find the cause of their illness. Often, simple problems become quite complex and multiple diseases occur simultaneously.

When you're treating your cat and they're not getting better, it's time for a Second Opinion. You need answers. You need to understand what's causing your cat's symptoms and what to do about them. You need to know their prognosis and, most importantly, how far to go. When your cat's life is on the line, you need a concise understanding of the situation and the best possible medical care.

A Board Certified Feline Specialist is trained to understand why things happen, not just that they do. As the only Board Certified Feline Specialist in Georgia, this is something we do every day. We'll schedule a full hour to review your cat's medical history and perform a thorough physical exam. We'll sort through the issues and explain things in language you can understand. Together, we'll formulate a treatment plan specifically for your cat. We'll tell you what to expect and what their quality of life will be with proper treatment.
